

Honors Guild

Scott Moeschberger, Director

Taylor University's Honors Guild is a challenging academic experience for high ability, highly motivated students from across academic disciplines. Students must be selected to be part of the Honors Guild. The Honors Guild seeks to provide an intentional environment where curiosity is nurtured and ideas are examined. The honors curriculum emphasizes the integration of faith and learning, ideas, and values through discussion-based courses, mentoring relationships, global engagement, and student initiative. All students participating in the Honors Guild should register for the honors preceptorial discussion group associated with IAS 110. The Honors Guild functions as an academic minor, but is designed to offer students a four-year experience through diverse course offerings (many of which meet foundational core requirements) and co-curricular programming. Many honors courses are listed in the schedule of classes by the academic areas that offer them and are noted by an "H" after the course number.

Due to the structure of the first year, as well as the intended four-year design, students must apply to the Honors Guild by February 1, prior to their freshman year. Typically, incoming freshmen applying to the program have earned a minimum 3.70 high school GPA and a combined (Math and Reading) SAT score of 1280 or ACT composite score of 28. The application process is competitive due to size limitations. Further information about the Honors Guild, including application procedures, may be obtained by contacting the Director of the Honors Guild.
